2Q10 COMMENTARY

After a promising start in April in which the S&P 500 Index reached a cyclical high of 1217, buoyed in large part by robust corporate earnings reports, the US large capitalization equity rally was throttled during the remainder of the second quarter. Stock prices turned sharply negative as economic growth expectations were downgraded around the world, worries about the potential for a “double-dip” recession were re-kindled, sovereign credit quality was questioned and investor risk aversion skyrocketed. Massive investor uncertainty regarding the global economic growth outlook was aggravated further by a variety of other developments – including Eurozone government budget crises, a major oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico, rapidly-mounting geopolitical tensions between North and South Korea, financial industry regulatory reform and a 1,000 point “flash crash” in the US equity market – that proved too much for the stock market to overcome. Large capitalization benchmark indexes such as the S&P 500 and Russell 1000 skidded lower by -11.43% and -11.44%, respectively.

For the second quarter of 2010, the Marsico Growth Fund underperformed its primary benchmark, the S&P 500 Index, by 132 basis points. Stock selection and an overweighted posture in Materials, the worst-performing sector of the benchmark index, had the largest material negative impact on performance for the quarter. No exposure to relatively stronger-performing sectors like Utilities and Consumer Staples hurt returns. Similarly, an overweighted posture in the weaker-performing Consumer Discretionary sector detracted from performance. Certain Financials and Industrials stocks dampened results as well.

Stock selection in the Information Technology sector had the largest positive impact on performance for the quarter where certain Technology Hardware & Equipment and Software & Services positions emerged as the largest individual contributors overall. Stock selection in the Telecommunication Services sector modestly boosted returns as well. Additionally, maintaining an average cash position of approximately 2% helped preserve capital to a certain degree in a declining market environment.

As of the end of the period, the Fund's primary sector-level areas of emphasis were in Consumer Discretionary, Information Technology, Financials, Materials, and Industrials sectors. The Fund had no exposure to the Consumer Staples and Utilities sectors, and had approximately 2% in cash and other net assets.
